ZETIANXIA CLUBHOUSE, located at a large water-themed residential area, will be initially used as sales center and then converted into a community clubhouse to serve the entire residential area. To show the characteristics of "water", we integrated water elements into our design to combined the nature with architecture, showing the impact of "water" on residents and reflecting the features of waterfront life. A "waterway" goes through the building and divides the architecture space into two parts, which explains our design concept of coexistence between water, architecture and human being. Furthermore, our design is not just for formal aesthetic. The "waterway" is also a sharing space in the building, with office space and public space on both sides connected by bridges, which makes the division of space and function clearer.
